Very friendly service from the staff 5 out of 5 My wife and I stayed at this hotel for a weekend, and it was very helpful. Very friendly service from the staff. The hotel is in a quiet area and close to everything. We would stay here again. Overall, we thought this was a great, clean, affordable hotel. It was in an ideal location for what we were looking for. There were some construction sounds in the apartment building area, but they weren't too loud. 5 out of 5 We had a great time in Hernando at this charming old motel. The rooms were updated with flat-screen TV's and very spacious. The beds were comfortable and the owners were very friendly. We will definitely stay here again! 5 out of 5 Beautiful location, beautiful views, and an amazing room. I spent 5 nights here, and it was my favorite. I was upgraded to the outside area, which was beautiful. The owners are very friendly and helpful. I would recommend this to any traveler.

Q: Does RDS support any High Availability or Distributed Software Platforms? We want to use RDS in AWS to run our platform, and have a couple of questions regarding this: Do you think that RDS supports any High Availability or Distributed Software Platforms? (like zookeeper, and etc...) If you do, how can we know this? Is there any document on this? Thanks

A: There is no Distributed Software Platforms yet. Amazon's RDS API documentation is as thin as water but the implications are huge and will be here for years to come. You should definitely consider other options as the underlying issues of Distributed Software Platforms will be very similar to a traditional RDBMS if there is only one RDS instance. I don't know why you mention Zookeeper but it is by far the most popular distributed system I've ever used. It runs on anything from in memory data structures to disk. You have options of writing code in C/C++/Java/Python/PHP/Ruby or using your preferred language's scripting language (e.g. Bash) or even SQL. I've used it on Windows, Linux and Solaris (RHEL5). All with minimal effect on system resources. I have written several blog posts on Zookeeper, including the two most popular ones. As for an equivalent to Zookeeper, there is nothing else. Distributed computing will
