Why would I share this recipe for a bundle of downloaded content without all of the bundled content, without my commentary to go along with it? I mean, for me personally, I would be more inclined to show you a video, with commentary, and copy the link to YouTube for the published recipe.

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a selective deposition reactor which is used for producing a polycrystalline semiconductor such as silicon or gallium arsenic, and a manufacturing method of semiconductor devices using the selective deposition reactor.

2. Description of the Prior Art A method has been conventionally known as a method of producing a polycrystalline semiconductor such as silicon or gallium arsenic and a method of manufacturing semiconductor devices such as a thin film transistor or the like. In the conventional method of producing a polycrystalline semiconductor or a method of manufacturing semiconductor devices, a porous silicon film was previously formed on an insulating substrate, and an annealing processing was applied. In general, the porous silicon was produced by exposing an insulating substrate to a liquid silicon etching solution such as a hydrofluoric acid solution, an aqueous hydrogen peroxide solution, etc. which has a strong oxidizing power. Such a processing procedure to create a porous silicon film on an insulating substrate has several problems. In particular, when the porous silicon film is formed, undesired electrostatic charges are readily caused by an unexpected chemical reaction or the liquid etching solution which is usually used. In the case of employing the liquid etching solution, the electrostatic charges resulting from this chemical reaction are charged to the porous silicon film which is previously formed. Thus, the charged porous silicon film became an impurity source of defects within the substrate. The defect of a substrate is directly linked to the quantity of impurities contained in a polycrystalline semiconductor. This leads to lowering of yield in the production of the polycrystalline semiconductor or a semiconductor device. In addition, it is very difficult to control the electric potential of the substrate. For instance, it is substantially impossible to prevent the electrical charges from leaking to another substrate. Consequently, the process to form the porous silicon film and the process to fabricate a semiconductor device are mutually conflicting in respect to performance.
