After a trying season, Cal's Drew Dalton heads to college football's honor roll At the end of a season that will be remembered by Cal fans as unimpressive at best and disastrous at worst, the Golden Bears are at least in some solace in knowing at least one of their players has had a good season. Drew Dalton, a junior safety, was selected to the Pac-12's men's basketball first-team all-conference team, according to a statement released on the conference's official website. The Sacramento native is one of just two California players to make the top-25 selections. USC's Chris Fisher was a second-team pick. Dalton was selected to the preseason team as a starter, but he ended up coming off the bench to start eight of the first 11 games, filling in for injured starters. He made 12 tackles in losses to Stanford and Washington, Pac-12-leading Stanford's list of top defensive plays of the season. But he was impressive in a 30-10 victory against the Oregon Ducks on the road, finishing the game with five tackles, including one for a loss of nine yards. Dalton came into the season as the 15th-ranked safety in the nation, according to the 247Sports.com Composite. He came to Berkeley hoping to continue his strong play into his senior year, and he was probably the only Cal player who was excited when the season began, even though the Bears struggled mightily from the start. Throughout the season, Dalton took many by surprise with his excellent play. He was named the conference's defensive player of the week once in October, after a big stop against Arizona State. He was selected as one of three young Pac-12 defenders to watch in June, because he had a knack for key plays and even though the Bears had a number of other standout defensive players. Dalton was an honorable mention Pac-12 All-freshman team selection in 2014 and a third-team Pac-12 All-freshman selection in 2013. He is Cal's first unanimous Pac-12 Defensive Player of the Year.
