Inter-observer agreement of classification of the severity of liver cirrhosis by means of ultrasound imaging. The diagnosis of liver cirrhosis poses an important challenge to the clinician. A reliable, standardized and easy classification of liver cirrhosis is not available. The aim of this study was to investigate the reliability of ultrasound imaging in diagnosing the severity of liver cirrhosis, as well as to determine the feasibility of using this method in a routine setting. We included 100 patients with liver cirrhosis and 50 healthy controls. Liver cirrhosis was classified according to the Scheuer classification. Ultrasound imaging (USI) was performed, and the presence of ascites, varices and splenomegaly was noted. The USI results were classified according to the severity of cirrhosis. A total of 60 patients and 30 controls were included in the reproducibility study. In 28/60 patients, the severity of the cirrhosis was classified differently by the 2 observers, which corresponds to an agreement of 33%. In the other 35 patients, there was agreement between the 2 observers in 92%. In the 12 patients who did not show agreement between the observers, there was a difference in the severity of cirrhosis of 1 class. In the 30 patients who were included in the reliability study, the intensity of the cirrhosis in the USI studies correlated with the severity of the cirrhosis. The severity of cirrhosis was determined by means of USI with good reliability. USI is a feasible method in a routine setting.
