FIFA 22 introduces “HyperMotion Technology,” a feature that makes the player feel like he’s actually playing in the game – at first glance he may look like he’s playing a normal FIFA match, but he’s actually moving in real-life, using movement data from real players – it’s a real player being represented in-game. Introduction As an introduction to the FIFA 22 Ultimate Team during the EA Play Showcase, Treyarch’s creative director Jonathan O’Donnell explained that players in-game are actually individuals in real life, which was the inspiration for the HyperMotion Technology feature. “When we talked about the technology, we knew that there was a lot of real-life data available,” O’Donnell said. “We looked at a lot of it and the data that was available was really good, but it was mostly motion capture data of big plays. “The way we wanted to use it was not to just show off cool one-off plays, but to use the real-life data to tell the story of an actual football match, to tell the story of the whole game. “The idea was always to use the real-life data, but make it into a more virtual game – we call it HyperMotion because of the technology behind it. We believe that it is a very interesting way to combine the real-life data with the virtual element of the game.” FIFA 22 introduces “HyperMotion Technology,” which uses motion capture data collected from 22 real-life players playing a complete, high-intensity football match in motion capture suits. The data collected from player movements, tackles, aerial duels and on-ball actions is used to power FIFA 22 gameplay. HyperMotion talks to the player The fact that the gameplay feels so authentic is due to the inclusion of real-life motion data collected from the World Cup matches that took place in the summer of 2014.
