In Poland, among manufacturing companies, there are production of a great number of types of paint and coatings. As a result, emission of volatile organic compounds (VOCs) into the atmosphere in the workplace is an unavoidable phenomenon. This research was aimed to verify the efficiency of biofilters in a system of ventilation of paint rooms. In the experiments, the following paints were examined: liquid acrylics, water-based polyurethane, oil-based polyurethane and oil-based acrylics. In each of the analyzed paints, the toxicity of the volatile products was determined. The results showed that the system of ventilation of paint rooms with the use of biofilters reduced emissions of VOCs in paints much more than the ventilation system without the use of biofilters. In paints, the level of VOCs is low in the presence of the biofilter. The ventilation system was used only in the two paint rooms, in which the level of VOCs determined in

What's new in HAJWALA LINE:

SINGH RANCH, Jalandhar - It's hard to understand why the rejection of Akram Sofi and his tribe came so suddenly a few weeks ago, right at the beginning of the month of Janmashtami, as the Jassouli community knows their month in the Indian calendar. Jassoulis are a water-priest tradition of the Sikh religion and mostly a hybrid, as composed of Hindus and Muslims. Their original name was Jamliah, which, through years of intermixing and acculturation, had changed to Jassulis. They celebrate their Muslim festivals such as Eid and Karbuz Pari as part of their Sikh rituals and participate in their faith in every way. But they still remain a tightly knit group, holding tightly to their customs and traditions. Most of them live along the eastern edge of Punjab, and in the same district as the village of Hajwala, where Sofi was born and grows up. In the village with a population of six thousand, everyone knew each other and looked after each other's needs. There were maybe a dozen families there in the 1980s - mostly Hindus, with some Muslims. They had traditionally made their livelihood by farming and raising cattle. During summer when the crops were ready to harvest, members of the community would move out and help their brothers and sisters in another village; then in winter when the crops were sown again, they would move back. Sofi became one of them. In 2013, he was celebrating Eid with the village elders and fell in love with one of them who was later called his husband, Dhukawala, as Sofi saw what looked like a table from his Hindu background, decorated with vermilion and adorned with mangalaas (otherwise known as rangoli or festival colours), and he was confused. What did he do? Did he speak up about it? No. He quietly kept his love and dream out of sight, and he started planning - he went from village to village with his friends praying that one day this lovely table will be his own. He is what they would call a Hirda (prophet). In the next year, 2015, his wish came true. In front of everyone, his new sister-in-law and her family hosted a grand wedding for him and Dhukawala, and in the same year, as two sisters from another village, they finally came to the point that they decided to make the
