This study will examine the feasibility and efficacy of delivering the Oregon Model of Care (OMC) for substance abuse treatment in a prison setting. The OMC has demonstrated effectiveness with dually diagnosed inmates in the community, yet, no study has evaluated this model within a correctional context. The Oregon program has been successful because of its community focus. Client and provider perceptions of the OMC will be examined within the context of a prison setting to determine what, if any, adaptations might be necessary. The OMC was selected for this study because it was designed as a client centered, nonviolent approach with a strong emphasis on community-based practices. The study will randomize 120 drug-involved inmates
