pathology. Although the above references cover the most important aspects of the subject of neuromuscular disorders and cardiac pacing, the reader is still left with a number of unanswered questions that could be looked at in a more extended way. For instance, the questions raised below are often hard to address (or not approached at all), although they certainly deserve detailed and dedicated studies. The aim of this review is to stimulate such a research and to stimulate the reader to look at the problem from the point of view of a neuromuscular disorders specialist. Glucagon-like peptide 1 receptor agonist liraglutide and empagliflozin: opportunities for cancer treatment.
Treatment of type 2 diabetes mellitus increases the risk of cancer, particularly colorectal cancer and breast cancer. Metformin, a biguanide agent, reduces cancer recurrence and mortality rates in patients with type 2 diabetes. However, its use is associated with gastrointestinal and breast cancer incidence. In contrast, liraglutide, a glucagon-like peptide 1 (GLP-1) analogue, and empagliflozin, a sodium glucose co-transporter 2 (SGLT2) inhibitor, are currently approved for the treatment of type 2 diabetes. Recent advances in understanding the mechanisms of action of these drugs have led to the realization that their anti-cancer properties are likely to involve a combination of pleiotropic effects. A feature of GLP-1 receptor agonists and SGLT2 inhibitors is a reduction in food intake and an increase in satiety, leading to weight loss. This is coupled to increased energy expenditure due describe a 65-year-old Japanese woman with newly diagnosed rheumatoid arthritis who developed pulmonary and muscular disseminated mycobacterial infection. She was treated with sulfasalazine and cyclosporine. Her symptoms markedly improved after the introduction of clarithromycin, and she completely recovered. The remaining mycobacteria in her blood culture, however, were later determined to be atypical mycobacteria other than Mycobacterium tuberculosis complex. Correlation of pituitary and testicular response to GnRH in pubertal and adult patients with idiopathic hypogonadotropic hypogonadism. The molecular pathophysiology of idiopathic hypogonadotropic hypogonadism (IHH) is unclear, however hyperprolactinemic hypogonadotropic hypogonadism seems to be more closely related to pituitary dysfunction in IHH. This study aimed to correlate pituitary and testicular responses to GnRH in patients with IHH. A total of 43 patients with IHH of idiopathic or cryptogenetic origin and 14 healthy age-matched
