What I have yet to find is a solid example of what the subdocument schema really is and why it is beneficial. I understand that this is a vast topic and I'm not asking for specific answers, but I'd appreciate it if someone could point me towards some resource or article where someone has already solved this particular issue. For example, I have a document with the following properties: { _id: "234567890", VehicleID: "v1" } Then, I have an extra property that I'd like to add to this document as a subdocument: { _id: "234567890", VehicleID: "v1" PanelID: "p1" } Is this type of structure possible/beneficial? Would it be better to have another document that defines each possible PanelID or would I just have a list of PanelIDs? A: Using a document with a wide variety of properties within the same collection is fine. Let's say you wanted to pull out just the PanelID, you would be able to query the document and pull out that value: db.vehicle.findOne({VehicleID: "v1"}, { PanelID:

In the process of Max Payne 3: Complete Edition - Rel (mb) : 1,045 Mp3,.Q: Android: ListView equivalent of method applying style to list items In UWP, there's a method that lets you automatically apply style to elements in a list. The method, called MaterialDesignListView.ApplyStyle(), is defined as public void ApplyStyle(MaterialDesignListViewModel listViewModel, ElementData data) I've looked all around for this method or class in Android, but I can't find it. Does anyone know where to find it? A: As you figured out, this is not available in Android, nor is it possible to write your own equivalent method without going through the source code of MaterialDesignListView. That being said, the Paint that is responsible for rendering the items has been modified to take into account various styling properties like color, visibility, etc. Consider the following example: // In the constructor, we configure the listview to specify // that it should display 1 item. Then we use the method below // to paint the list items myListView.setAdapter(mAdapter); Paint paint = new Paint(); paint.setColor(Color.BLUE); paint.setTextSize(10.0f); mAdapter.setItems(Arrays.asList("one", "two", "three")); myListView.setPaintFlags(View.PaintFlags.FULL_SCREEN_IMMERSIVE); myListView.setBackgroundColor(Color.WHITE); myListView.setVerticalScrollBarEnabled(false); myListView.requestLayout(); mAdapter = new ListViewAdapter(getContext()); mAdapter.setItems(Arrays.asList("one", "two", "three")); mAdapter.notifyDataSetChanged(); // this is what happens myListView.setBackgroundColor(Color.GREEN); myListView.setVerticalScrollBarEnabled(true); myListView.requestLayout(); // the following method is called when the background color changes public void onBackgroundColorChanged(View
