It could have some issues, but overall it's not as bad as some of the other new tabs extensions you'll encounter. The weather is attractive and accurate, and you can get an idea of what news articles you can expect to see when you use the extension. You might find, however, that Microsoft News New Tab Crack will lag when you open it because it's coming from Microsoft servers. For the most part, you can forget about this being a great deal of an issue, and you're probably already sufficiently used to having Edge (or some similar browser) as your default. It does have flaws, and if you want a reliable extension that's as good as it gets, then we'd suggest that you go with Google's version. Microsoft News New Tab news stories It appears that Microsoft has decided to update its new tab page on Chrome. The new tab page for Microsoft Edge for the Chrome browser has been updated with the introduction of the new Microsoft News app. If you haven't heard of this app before, it is an add-on that takes up the location above the news flow on the browser's new tab page. This allows you to get news about the city you are in. You can also read the weather forecast for your city for the upcoming days. Microsoft News New Tab is not as the title suggests, simply an extension for the Edge browser. This means it does not come built into the browser, but is instead installed as an extension and activates when you open the Edge browser. Microsoft News New Tab is free and can be found on the Chrome Web Store. It is also an Electron-based application, so be aware of that when installing. The app functions as a Google alternative when using Chrome. This means it can do many things such as search for web pages, open links, and more. If you haven't used Edge before, you can safely assume that News New Tab works in the same way. All you need to do is tap to the location above the news flow and the app will open up. You will find the app immediately after the news-tray. The app will look like the image provided below. The app gives you insights about your city and forecasts for the upcoming days. You can also access your visited pages and then open them with ease. There is also a tab for the weather of the city you are in. To open the app, just tap the weather tab at the top-left. You can simply tap the search bar to do your search. The search bar can be found above the news feed on the app. You can choose to see either news or weather. This
