Watch it online and download Nao Massage Video in .Q: Pthreads: Once thread completed it goes to next available thread in the queue I know that std::thread go to next available thread in the queue so this fact doesnt matter. My question is what happens if we send a message to a running thread which is already in the queue? For example, in the thread void thread function() { sendMessage(...); /Do some computation/ sendMessage(...); } what happens if the thread is already in the queue in the sendMessage function? Will it be still queued or skip it? A: The std::thread API as of C++11 is a bit confusing. There are two queues: std::thread::~thread method returns a pointer to a std::thread object that's been constructed on the call stack. std::thread::run method returns a pointer to a std::thread object that's already running. //
