INSERT INTO table (id, dtime, object, dataclass, classname, objectclassname) VALUES (function_to_chunk_id(next_id(5)), '@m:s','section', '"class_name", null, '"objectclass_name", null') But this works? INSERT INTO table (id, dtime, object, dataclass, classname, objectclassname) VALUES (next_id(5), '@m:s','section', '"class_name", null, '"objectclass_name", null') A: As syadmani replied in comments, the answer is probably that in the first case, you have a double quote and a space before the function, and in the second, you don't. However, the first case probably would also fail, because the query optimizer wouldn't know what you meant to do with the function. However, it could be that when you say "function_to_chunk_id(next_id(5)), you are trying to execute a statement in the database, but when you say 'function_to_chunk_id(next_id(5)) you are trying to write a string literal to the database.
