The use of donor-acceptor hybrid nanostructures as artificial light-harvesting systems has been demonstrated to be promising in solid-state dye-sensitized solar cells. However, the enhancement in the light-harvesting efficiency within the relevant energy-transfer regime is not well understood. In this work, we elucidate the nature of the dye-Au hybrid nanostructures in terms of the enhancement of the radiative rate constant and find that the energy-transfer efficiency should decrease as the Au nanoparticle size increases (from 9.4 nm down to 3.7 nm). Furthermore, we also provide a general approach for further enhancing the energy-transfer efficiency by adjusting the size and geometry of the dye-Au nanoparticle clusters. The results are supported by time-dependent density-functional theory calculations of the rate constant and energy-transfer processes. Q: Does the "mouse is a destructive gadget" rule apply to pistols as well? I'm playing a police officer on my PC and I got the city transport vehicle in my side of the road. I can open the door of it, and it has a shiny box in it. I can't get back into the city vehicle by myself. The only way to get back into it is if I leave the mouse pointer over the corresponding sensor on the city vehicle, or if I use the homing beacon on the side of the road. I'm playing a single player, so I can't just leave the game and come back later, I have to wait for it to load again. Question: Are there any non-destructive things that I could use to leave the city vehicle and get back in? A: While the side mission is not available to multiple players (AFAIK), you can play as either a civilian or police officer, so your adventure works fine for multiple players as
