Shimenji-ee, also known as Shimenji English Enhanced, is a fun software program that enables users to add one or several silly characters to their screen that play around and wander. The interface of the program is minimal and highly intuitive, seeing that all you have to do is choose a mascot out of the ones that are provided and then just click the 'Use' button. Any type of person, no matter how inexperienced they might be, is able to find their way around the app and surround themselves with cute companions. There is no limit to how many of these small characters a user can add, and therefore, you have the possibility of covering your desktop with cuteness. All the actions of the minions are defined with the help of XML files, and the images (animations) can be changed, both of which make this program highly customizable. If you right click on a mascot, a context menu appears that contains several options such as 'Another One!', 'Bye Bye!', 'Follow Mouse!', 'Reduce to One!', 'Restore IE' and so on. From here you can also change the behavior of your little munchkins, like making them climb along the ceiling, jump from left edge, walk left and sit, and the list goes on and on. All in all, Shimenji-ee is a very adorable and fun piece of software that displays one or more mascots on your desktop. Thanks for joining us for this LIVE blog of the House Financial Services Committee hearing on proposed new standards for debt collection! Please keep it clean. — Good morning, everyone. Well, that's a really long title. My apologies. Let me try again. Good morning, everyone. Yes. That's better. We're going to see what, if anything, gets discussed. We'll stick with the real deal for a while. Rep. Carolyn Maloney of New York is the committee chair and our witness today is Richard Cordray, director of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau. Here's an overview of Richard Cordray's testimony, which runs about 20 minutes, 45 seconds. Here's the main part, or the part about getting to the nuts and bolts of things. Bottom line: Richard Cordray is proposing a rule that would mandate greater transparency for everyone involved in the debt collection and enforcement game. "I believe the new rule will benefit consumers in their relationship with the debt collection agencies," says Cordray. He says the new rule will help consumers better understand how to protect themselves in a relationship with the debt collector. That would be a huge, huge benefit to consumers. It would be hard for someone to charge more fees than they need to and know what to charge for services after that. Markets, credit reports and other information are now only available to debt collectors and credit reporting agencies if a consumer requests it. Consumers can voluntarily notify a debt collector or credit reporting agency about a dispute, but only if they do it through a website designated by the CFPB. Cordray says there are potential consequences of how this all operates now. "If the debt collection company makes a mistake, and the consumer is harmed as a result, we cannot compensate them if the consumer does not have the information," Cordray says. "Only one side has access to the information, and it is the debt collection agency." The CFPB and Cordray are proposing legislation to expand the b7e8fdf5c8
