Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an optical transmission system for modulating a luminous flux of a light source with modulation data by modulating the luminous flux of a light source with the modulation data to provide optical transmission light, and more particularly relates to a configuration of an optical transmission device applied to an optical transmission module. 2. Description of the Related Art In an optical transmission device using the optical modulation technology, a voltage is applied to an optical modulator to drive the optical modulator to modulate the luminous flux of a light source with modulation data to provide optical transmission light. The output light (optical transmission light) from the optical modulator is transmitted, for example, to a light receiving element to detect the optical transmission light. Since the optical modulator has a greater light loss due to the presence of a loss section such as a waveguide and an optical device to modulate the luminous flux of a light source, the transmittance of the output light from the optical modulator drops. A possible solution to this problem is disclosed in, for example, JP-A-4-317099, in which a technology for providing the optical modulator and a light source such 0cc13bf012

Forty-three women with chronic hypertension who were believed to be at least two years post-hysterectomy and had undergone salpingo-oophorectomy were randomly assigned to two different treatment groups. One group was treated with oral estrogens, while the other group received 100,000 units of HCG every two weeks. After six months of therapy, the blood pressure of the two groups were essentially identical. Both HCG and estrogens reduced the amount of protein in the urine of women who had received them. Ovulation occurred in only two of the 24 women treated with estrogens and in eight of the 19 women treated with HCG. We conclude that in women with chronic hypertension who had undergone salpingo-oophorectomy, HCG was more effective than estrogens at stimulating ovulation.Alleles of IGF2 gene in Kala-Azar patients from four districts of West Bengal. In India, Kala Azar (KA) is a disease of lymphatic filariasis in humans. Deficient growth and decreased cognition are characteristic features in KA patients and are associated with severe immuno-suppression in the bone marrow. The underlying mechanism of growth impairment and immune deficiency in bone marrow is not known clearly, and therefore, understanding the role of IGF2 gene in bone marrow cells
