WINzard is a simple utility that allows you to play with all the Windows that are on your system. This program is extremely simple to use. You can use it to restore, maximize, minimize, hide or remove any window of your choice. Moreover, you can easily target a single window (based on its name) or a group of windows (based on their theme). Another interesting feature of this program is that you can change the size of a window and play with its position on your desktop. It also allows you to open and close any window with a single click. You can either do it by opening a window (for the main program) or by accessing a folder. This feature works by default when you install this application. Another very important feature of this application is that you can open a window by dragging it to the system tray. When you get your Windows to the right place, you can open it from there. This way, you can minimize all the open windows into a single icon in the system tray and then restore them whenever you want. Besides, WINzard allows you to customize any window in the system tray. What's more, you can use Winzard to bring back everything that you minimized to the system tray. Using this functionality, it is very easy to find that icon once you minimize something. What's New In?

WINzard is a simple utility that comes with a mouse-and-keyboard interface. It's what windows look like when you shrink them down by one-third. It's so simple and beautiful, there's no other way to describe it. The interface is easy to understand and use. Windows that WINzard manages are floating on the screen. To manage them you move the mouse around and use the keyboard to minimize, maximize, restore, and close them. WINzard is an easy to use utility that lets you manage your open windows without the cluttering desktops and taskbars. - Hide and show open windows - Set margins - Set number of open windows - Set icon size - Set monitor type - Set screen position U.S. Pat. No. 5,636,538 (Shawn et al.) discloses a corneal cross-linking procedure for treating keratoconus and other indications. The procedure described is one of several corneal cross-linking techniques that have become known in the past few years. This U.S. patent, for example, discloses a method involving exposing selected areas of a patient's cornea to ultraviolet light following which the eyes are closed for a period of time. The patent further discloses that a preferred embodiment for delivery of the ultraviolet light includes a hollow metal needle assembly that is used to puncture the central cornea of the eye to a depth of between about 4 to 5 mm. Another corneal cross-linking procedure and apparatus for delivering the necessary cross-linking radiation is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 6,175,710. That patent discloses a small diameter cannula with a small diameter ultraviolet light source that emits ultraviolet light that is used to cross-link collagen within the corneal stroma. At least a portion of the stroma surrounding the light source is typically exposed to ultraviolet radiation for a length of time in order to increase its refractive index and maintain the curvature of the cornea. One embodiment disclosed in the patent utilizes a single laser emitter that is pulsed to control the depth of corneal penetration. For example, a pulsed ultraviolet laser beam having a wavelength of 365 nm (UV-A light) is used. This is the wavelength used, for example, in the Human Eye and Body irradiation system by the assignee of that patent, CorneaGen, Inc. In that system, all of the corneal
