Q: Correct way of usage boost::multi_array_ref I've got a question about the correct usage of boost::multi_array_ref. I'm trying to create 3D matrix (I'd like to have 3D array, but it seems that the easiest way of declaration is via multi_array_ref) of std::array,3>. But I'm having trouble with default constructor of multi_array_ref. It seems that I can't use it as array like class A[2,2,2] = multi_array_ref(data);. So question is: is there any possibilities to initialize such multi_array_ref? A: You would need something like this: template class multi_array_ref { private: T* data; public: multi_array_ref() : data(nullptr) { // in real-world code this would probably throw std::bad_alloc. // or at least call the T's allocation constructor. } multi_array_ref(const T* data_) : data(&data_) { //
