Q: How to change format of float in pgfplotstable? Suppose I have the following pgfplots data file: `\documentclass{article}`

\usepackage{pgfplotstable} \begin{filecontents*}{./data.csv}
0.1,1 0.33,1.5 0.33,2 \end{filecontents*} \begin{document}
\pgfplotstableread[col sep=comma]{./data.csv}\datatable
\end{document}

I'd like to format the float numbers as 4 decimal places instead of scientific format. I've tried

\pgfplotstableread*[dec sep=comma]{./data.csv}\datatable

to no avail. A: This needs to be done on the pgfplotstable side as a table column. `\documentclass{article} \usepackage{pgfplotstable}`

\begin{filecontents*}{./data.csv} 0.1,1 0.33,1.5 0.33,2
\end{filecontents*} \pgfplotstableset{ table/dec sep=comma, table/dec rounding/.initial=4 } \begin{document}
```

```
\pgfplotstableread[col sep=comma,dec
sep=comma]{./data.csv}\datatable \end{document}

A presidential primary with over 20 candidates and no real front-runner likely means things are going to get messy over the next several months. There's one candidate, however, that will surely keep things tight: Super PACs. As these high-dollar groups still have to file their reports to the Federal Election Commission on Monday, there were some big stories from the Las Vegas area on Friday. Here's a look at what happened this past week with PACs, in order of size: 1. Rubio's Strong PAC -- About half a million dollars Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.) and his political committee have raised over $1 million since their super PAC was set up last month. The money is being raised

Windows Server 2012 R2. the movant contends that the papers before the district court at the time the appeal was filed were not the papers upon which the district court based its conclusion that the rents at issue were not "rental income" within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. sec.

1961(a). See supra note 7 (setting forth the district court's findings). The district court, however, made a finding not only that the rents were not "rental income" under sec. 1961(a), but also that they were "some type of a miscellaneous income" (J.A. at 197), including "wages." (J.A. at 196, 197). The district court did not elaborate further as to the source of this income. Because of the lack of clarity, we conclude that the district court's conclusion was based on the papers before the court at the time the appeal was filed. Our remand in this case does not suggest that we require the district court to remand for further factual findings by the magistrate. Rather, we think that the district court should proceed to review the magistrate's findings de novo, and if necessary, make further findings. 15 In concluding that the magistrate's findings were not clearly erroneous, we recognize that in certain respects the district court's analysis was more complete and thorough than our own. The district court did not attempt to reconcile the different interpretations that could be drawn from the two separate definitions of "income" in the 1984 and 1985 amendments. It also failed to explain why it concluded that "rental income" was not defined in the criminal statute because it found that "rental income" was not a term of art in the tax code (J.A. at 197), despite the existence of the second and third definitions. Finally, the district court's decision was made without the benefit of the Supreme Court's three recent decisions.
