Virtua Wing (VG): 4D and Virtual Reality Multiplayer Air Combat Game. Vitamin D in Mediterranean countries: The dark paradox. This study aims to review the available scientific literature on vitamin D status in Mediterranean countries in terms of cutaneous synthesis of vitamin D, patterns of deficiency and their effects on health, and methods for evaluating vitamin D status. There is considerable evidence to suggest that vitamin D status may be worse in Mediterranean countries than in any other geographical area. There are 2 general mechanisms by which solar ultraviolet B radiation may become vitamin D deficient in the Mediterranean region: firstly, people living in sunny countries may not use sunscreen effectively when exposed to prolonged solar radiation and therefore accumulate higher vitamin D3 doses than in northern countries. Secondly, the frequency and intensity of sun exposure in the Mediterranean are lower compared with northern countries because of a lower latitudinal gradient in solar radiation. In any case, this vitamin D deficient status is likely to be compounded by the fact that the consumption of fish, fish oils, and vitamin D-fortified milk and milk products is lower in countries such as Greece, Spain, Italy, and Turkey compared with the UK. A large proportion of Mediterranean populations may become deficient in vitamin D as a result of social deprivation, resulting in poorer health. The levels of serum vitamin D deficiency in some Mediterranean regions may be greater than anywhere else in the world. The Mediterranean countries in question do not have the same latitude as the northern countries of the UK, the Netherlands, or Scandinavia, and people living in such countries do not have access to the same dietary sources of vitamin D as those who live in the UK or the Netherlands. Some physicians, scientists, and politicians also question the need for vitamin D supplementation because they believe the vitamin is not required for adequate bone health. However, the evidence is clear that many people who suffer from vitamin D insufficiency will not recover fully unless they are given adequate vitamin D. * * Copyright 2010 Red Hat Inc. * * Permission is hereby granted, free of charge, to any person obtaining a * copy of this software and associated documentation files (the "Software"), * to deal in the Software without restriction, including without limitation * the rights to use, copy, modify, merge, publish, distribute, sublicense, * and/or sell copies of the Software, and to permit persons to whom the * Software is furnished to do so, subject to the following conditions: * * The above copyright notice and this permission notice shall be included in all copies or substantial portions of the Software. * * The copyright holder for this preprint (which was not certified by peer review) is the author/funder, who has granted bioRxiv a license to display the preprint in perpetuity.
