It offers the features of both Photoshop and Photoshop Elements except the ability to perform 3D image operations, use layers to achieve extreme editing power, and allow interactive access to text layers. The Elements and Photoshop are great tools for people who want to edit images, but don't have the budget for the full version of Photoshop. You can download and try out the Elements trial version from www.adobe.com/products/photoshop_elements/photoshop_elements_trial.html. And finally, Elements can also edit, in a limited way, RAW images. For example, you can make adjustments to the levels, and merge or layer RAW images.

Fahy will spend a month in Scotland in January to commemorate Wilberforce's 150 years of education. Fahy, who graduated in 1978, will visit Kelvingrove Art Gallery and Museum on January 14 to participate in the Scottish Parliament debate on an issue most closely linked to Lord Wilberforce, the abolition of slavery in the United Kingdom: the Scottish Slave Trade Act (1838). Fahy, who lives in the small town of Caledonia, Pennsylvania, will participate in the debate as part of a delegation of visiting students and alumni who support the Scottish Government's call for the prohibition of all human trafficking in Scotland. More than 200 former students and faculty members from more than 10 countries have signed on to the Scottish Government's call to end the manufacture and trade of human trafficking in Scotland. A good man, a great friend, a courageous and passionate advocate of human rights, the Reverend Dr. Wilberforce, born Samuel Wilberforce (later changed to Samuel Charles from his Anglican upbringing) was a pioneering figure in British society who, in 1807, had the courage to take a stand against a cultural practice many believed was defying the fundamental principles of Jesus Christ. In May 1807, Wilberforce gave the speech on the floor of Parliament that would inspire him to travel to Jamaica as an abolitionist. He arrived in Kingston, Jamaica, in October 1807, but he would not see any sign of a change in the institution, so he turned to the abolition movement in England to continue his work. Wilberforce and his fellow abolitionists quickly attracted the attention of the Brits with their efforts. In 1812, King George III, who was a supporter of slavery in the colonies, eventually abolished slavery in England. The Wilberforce petition received 4,285 signatures, a tremendous number of people at the time. The King would send the petition, but because the problem of the slavery had been allowed to fester in Jamaica for so long, Wilberforce's case was appealed to the House of Lords, which upheld the King's earlier decision to keep the slaves in Jamaica. "It was at this time the great American abolitionist, William Lloyd Garrison, who was in Jamaica on a mission for the London Mission
