The present invention relates generally to a method for extracting glycolipids from a sample such as a bovine milk to be analyzed and for analyzing the glycolipids and more specifically to a method for extracting glycolipids from a sample such as a bovine milk and analyzing a derivative of galactose contained in a target glycolipid in the sample. Glycolipids, which are complex sugar lipids having a galactose as a constituent sugar, have been found in a wide variety of organisms. The glycolipids have been known to be distributed in the living bodies of organisms such as plants, microorganisms, and animals. Among them, the glycolipids having a galactose residue at the N-acetylglucosyl-terminal, are called galactoglycolipids, in which the galactose is linked to an N-acetylglucosamine via a galactose linkage. The glycolipids are particularly rich in living bodies of mammals, and in the living bodies of mammals, the glycolipids having a galactose linked at the N-acetylglucosyl-terminal have been found to be distributed not only in mammary glands but also in the skin and the hair. The glycolipids having the galactose linked at the N-acetylglucosyl-terminal include α -galactosylceramide (hereinafter referred to as "GSL- α -1") and sulfated α -galactosylceramide, in addition to a sulfated- α -galactosyl-globoside. Known examples of the glycolipids are the glycolipids distributed in a mammary gland of a cow, and the glycolipids having the galactose linked at the N-acetylglucosyl-terminal contained in a milk or a skin. A method of analyzing those glycolipids has been known in the related art, such as a method as disclosed in a paper "Combined study on glycolipid distribution in the human milk and bovine milk", pages 465 to 476, of the collection of papers of the "The 5th Japan Agriculture and Food Chemistry Society, Abstracts, Dec. 10, 2004" (hereinafter referred to as "non-patent document 1") or the like.

Q: Is there an XP equivalent to the Windows button in Ubuntu's Unity? There was a shortcut in previous Windows versions called 'Windows' (see: How do I get back to the Windows button in Windows 8?) that you would press to get to the next desktop in Windows. Is there a similar shortcut in Ubuntu 12.04? A: The Super-Key of your choice (default is Super) will do the trick. For example, to open the launcher and click the next launcher item: Super-F As students across the country return to school in the fall, many will continue to experience hunger. Most children in the United States face at least a portion of the year without reliable access to food, with more than one in five experiencing hunger on a daily basis. That number rises to 40 percent for low-income children, many of whom rely on free or reduced-price school lunch and breakfast programs for meals. Districts and schools around the country have responded to the growing need for more nutritious food options in schools by implementing a number of initiatives, ranging from vending machines to cafeterias to provision of fresh and healthy foods at all times. Yet the most promising solution – providing meat, poultry and fish for sale and at reasonable prices – has been far too understudied in terms of its impacts on nutrition, health, hunger and food security in schools. Yet a new study released today by the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation reveals that providing retail-style access to meat, poultry and fish in schools can lead to substantial improvements in the dietary intake and nutritional health of the students participating in such programs. Roughly 60 percent of the nation's public schoolchildren currently receive free meals and free or reduced-price lunches, which are subsidized by the federal government. Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) provides benefits to working families with incomes below 150 percent of the federal poverty level, with an average monthly benefit of $133 per individual and $286 per household. In addition to SNAP, about half of the students also receive free or reduced-price breakfast and breakfast. Many school districts have taken on initiatives to improve the eating and nutrition in their own schools and feed their own students, including providing more fresh and healthier food options, increasing hours of operation, providing cafeterias, serving more fruits and vegetables, and providing cooking facilities for students. Districts also provide a wide variety of packaged foods and beverages to students, including full-service
