Q: How to add controls to the form on hosting a ASP.NET 3.5 site I am learning ASP.NET 3.5 and am currently working on a site. I have developed it in Visual Studio 2010 and have installed it on my machine. I want to put the site on a hosting company's website, but they don't allow me to upload to the main root. (they don't want to risk breaking the site.) I have figured out how to add the root folders to the Paths in the web.config. So, I can access it like They do, however, say I can't add controls to the main form without them taking control of the web server. So, I would be unable to add a treeview to the form. How can I get around this problem? Is it possible to create a form and upload it to the website? What would I have to do to get it to look the way it would on my machine? Any help would be greatly appreciated.

If there are any pieces of the butter that are hard (brown butter will get hard after a while), melt them in a microwave. Place the cookie squares on a baking sheet. Press 2 whole pieces of butter on top of each cookie and bake for 14 minutes. Let the cookie cool for 2-3 minutes and gently remove it from the baking sheet. Place on a rack to cool.
