Information about the implementation of the special version 4.0.Q: Javascript pattern to check if two array elements overlap I have two arrays and I would like to check if an element from the second array is in the first array, or if an element from the first array is in the second array. The first array would be named "full array" and the second array would be named "partial array". I could check to see if the first array has a field that matches the value of the second array field: `var fieldToLookFor = ["name", "address", "phone", "email"]; var fullArray = ["1", "red", "100", "contact@email.com", "John"]; var partialArray = ["name", "address", "phone", "email"]; // output will be: "name", "address", "phone", "email" //...if var arrayOfFields = []; for(var key in fullArray) { arrayOfFields.push(fullArray[key]); } //...if var arrayOfFields = []; for(var key in partialArray) { arrayOfFields.push(partialArray[key]); } console.log(arrayOfFields); // if.. matches -->...if ... //...if not...else... console.log("result: " + arrayOfFields.indexOf(arrayOfFields[1]));` Is there a more efficient way to check if the elements in the partialArray are in the fullArray than the above loop? A: If the arrays are already sorted, you can use `Array#indexOf` and `Array#includes` together with `Array#some`, in combination with a little trimming of the elements of the partial array. Try this: `var partial = ["name", "address", "phone", "email"]; var full = ["1", "red", "100", "0cc13bf012`
