The combination therapy of peg-interferon- α (PEG-IFN- α) and entecavir (ETV) is more potent and can suppress viral replication in HBeAg-positive chronic hepatitis B (CH-B). However, its safety is not well known. We performed a retrospective, multi-center, cohort study to investigate the safety of this combination therapy. From March 2011 to December 2012, 37 patients who achieved HBeAg seroconversion after treatment of ETV alone were enrolled in this study. Clinical laboratory tests were performed every month. At baseline, both patients and physicians were not informed about the combination treatment and there was no limitation on performing other medications. Among 37 patients, 12 patients started the combination treatment at a moderate baseline viral load ($\geq 10^4$ copies/mL). Compared with 24 patients with a low baseline viral load (10^3 to 10^4 copies/mL), the combination treatment did not result in any significant changes in laboratory findings and hepatic histology. Moreover, no patient showed decompensation of CH-B during an 84-week follow-up period. Our results suggest that there were no serious adverse events of combination therapy compared with ETV monotherapy in patients with HBeAg seroconversion after ETV treatment. Further prospective studies to compare the effectiveness and safety of combination therapy with and without treatment of PEG-IFN- α are required.Androgen deprivation therapy promotes bone formation in estrogen-deficient mice. Bone is a major target organ of androgen for male. While estrogen (E) is essential for the maintenance of skeletal integrity of women in their menopausal period. The dual mechanisms are indispensable to maintain bone homeostasis to maintain normal bone metabolism. In the present study, we examined the effects of E deficiency, androgen deprivation (AD) and combination therapy on calcium (Ca) content and bone microarchitecture in the femora of mice. At the age of 24 weeks, C3H/He female mice were

For example, on October 26, 2017, a group of FBI agents executed a pre-dawn raid on the office and home of Trump's longtime personal attorney and fixer Michael Cohen. Cohen has been pivotal in President Trump's ability to walk away from the Stormy Daniels matter, having negotiated the settlement with Cohen and turned over the $130,000 payment to Daniels in the end.
