SÃ£o Paulo, Brazil You have successfully added {0} taker, with the following {1} I believe all the concepts used to collect these names was their contribution to society. I personally cannot wait to see how the future will be for someone like that to represent us. Truly honored to meet him, and what a night to remember. It was on that night that I decided to make a difference in the world. He's all about God, and he's all about us. As a young man, I always believed one day I would see a black man with a PhD in front of the White House. Our intelligence is at a historic juncture, and we have the opportunity to expand the circle of those who benefit from America's investment in knowledge. The relief on my face was priceless, and it was clear to me the bond between us was real, meaningful, and special. The Dazzling DeBorahs, Robert S. A Frightened Nation President Obama made history as the first sitting president to have a White House Science Fair at the White House to showcase research and technology, and he even invited first lady Michelle Obama to join him. They gathered students to show off their work, who are now studying fields like the life sciences, the humanities, engineering, and more. Dr. Jill Biden and Malia Obama read the winning science fair projects, and President Obama shared a personal story about former Special Olympics competitor Alan Abeles, who is studying the day-to-day effects of AIDS on his life. The President also brought his son, 17-year-old Malia Obama, to the White House to demonstrate the role technology plays in her studies of government. This is all part of the Obama Administration's ongoing commitment to expand access to science, technology, engineering, and math education, including funding the White House Educator's Resource Center that connects educators with the latest educational resources. In fact, it was during last year's White House Science Fair that President Obama signed a new directive to promote STEM education throughout the federal government. The Obama administration has already tripled federal funding for STEM education in recent years and has committed $335 million in new funding through 2016, so the President can give the White House Science Fair a nod for helping advance that important goal, as well. The Obama administration is on track to meet its goal to double the number of college graduates with degrees in STEM subjects by 2020. An additional
