We focus on the neural signals necessary to communicate the time required to perform goal-directed movements that have variable durations, such as reach-to-grasp movement actions. Current theoretical approaches suggest that the mFoC is involved in the communication of such information, but the signals exchanged between mFoC and BG have not been identified. We hypothesize that the mFoC communicates time via the BG by directly (i.e., directly influencing activity of BG neurons) or indirectly (i.e., indirectly influencing activity of BG neurons) through cortico-BG neural circuits. The proposed research will first explore whether the dorsolateral/dorsomedial mFoC 6d1f23a050
