life where everything is wrong and wrong, When pain takes no one anymore, When there's nothing for the soul to lean on, When everything is wrong. How I wish I could just To believe in a child's dream And in my heart I hold out hope That I'll wake up happy again someday That everything in my life will be right again And something good will come again And I'll be happy again And again I'll be filled with a dream And again I'll be light and easy And I'll be loved again, of course My happiness, I'm sure, like a shadow Will be gone. And my soul without it, As if it had nothing to breathe all day long. So what am I to do And how am I to do, friends? With a soul that breathes, I'm sorry to say. But then I'll remember that I'm not alone, That there are others waiting from fate, That there are others, too, that I don't need them. I don't need. And I will be able to love them, And I'll be happy again. But from myself I must let love go forever, Which will, alas, tug at my heart And again, of course, I'll be loved, And my happiness, I'm sure, like a shadow, Will pass from me. And my soul without her, As without home, as without hands. And now it's not the same, now it's all not mine. And my happiness, I'm sure, is like a shadow, I'm sure, like a shadow, my soul is without it, As if without home, as if without hands. And I follow myself, I follow her this night. Walking on the ground. We are with her in the light of day. We're on the road together.

We're together to the end. And my happiness, I am sure, is like a shadow, But with her alone, she is not alone. And with her to the end. And with her in the light of day. We're on the road together. We're together till the end.
We're together till the wedding. And with her to the end. And with her in the lights. We're on the road together. The two of us to the end. We're together until the wedding. And after that we're together. We'll be a family, together. We're together till the wedding. We're together until the wedding.
